You can listen your way to better relationships

Good communication uses the same skills in a professional office, on a date, in a corporate board room, or at a kitchen table, says Dr. Jim Petersen, author of Why Don't We Listen Better? He wrote this book to help you gain these skills and improve your relationships.

According to this veteran counselor, most of us think we listen well, but don't. Not really hearing what others are trying to say can be costly. When people don't feel heard they tend to get irritated, confused, and pull away from each other.

You will chuckle in recognition at his flat-brain theory. It shows why we have trouble hearing each other and what we can do about it. Jim's insights and collection of listening techniques will give you creative ways to handle both daily interactions and difficult relationships.

Using the portable Talker-Listener Card will help you and others hear each other, relax, think clearer, and build empathy and cooperation. This unique approach to listening could change your life.

"What an eye-opener! When I started the book I thought I was a good listener … thoroughly enjoyable…"
Jim Misko, commercial real estate & author

"At last! The ingenious little card gets its due… I keep them by my phones to remind me to be present in conversations with friends, family and clients.
Pam Gross, founder of CareerMakers Inc. & author

"…a dynamic and easy to use system…should be required reading for every educator and anyone else interested in improving their relationships."
Patrick Stone, Ed.D. educator & author

After forty years of counseling and pastoral ministry, Jim Petersen now focuses on communication workshops and couples. His Talker-Listener Card helps keep relationships on track long after people leave his classes and office.
